COMPARING ALBERTA INDEPENDENCE VERSUS UNION FOR THE USA

By Brett Campbell

The separatist movement in Alberta is not a new one, and most are aware of its existence even if they're not politically motivated and/or informed. So, when the federal government goes rogue (as ours has, and as Pierre Trudeau's regime did), otherwise unconcerned Albertans look for options, including (especially) secession.

The statehood option on the other hand had been purposefully nipped in the bud by our federal government, state-owned media and government-mandated educational curriculum. This has been going on since the inception of this country, and particularly over half a century. An indoctrinated hatred and misunderstanding of all things American have fostered an ignorance-based hatred of all things US of A, especially among the more left-of-center Canadians -even here in Alberta.

But when the Alberta sovereignty option is scrutinized in detail the cracks begin to show, and that option becomes recognized as the uncertain fool's errand it is. The so-called "Clarity" Act is meant as a pacifier to keep us chasing our tails and to defeat the movement via stalled negotiations, moved goalposts and other means of running out the clock.

But make no mistake: in the event of a successful referendum to leave, and the resulting Unilateral Declaration of Independence (UDI), any such movement would be declared "illegal" and crushed by force - courtesy of Ottawa, Great Britain, China and the rest of the cabal.

It's when the individual recognizes this glaring flaw in the secession option that the statehood option gets the attention of the free-thinking public. What they discover after doing the scratch and sniff test by comparing the details of the US system of government vs. Canada's is that they have been lied to. The pros of joining the US (i.e.: a constitution that protects freedom, enterprise, checks and balances across the board, un-hindered economic access, a stronger currency, less of a tax burden, a strong and patriotic military that swears an oath to the constitution and to the people) become blatantly obvious. So do the consequences of remaining part of Canada/Great Britain/China and the totalitarian leadership they enforce.

Waiting until after separation has been achieved before making a decision on statehood vs. sovereignty is a non-starter because it would never be allowed to happen.

Because such a movement would not put statehood at the forefront of the movement the US would not come to Alberta's rescue. The US would refrain from using their military presence to deter a forceful cull by the cabal to keep Alberta and its resources under their custody and control. The US would only do this if statehood were the goal from the beginning. Once these facts become obvious there is only one choice that has any hope of preserving Alberta's freedom and way of life: Full US statehood.

This is where we come in. This is why we're so adamant that it's Statehood or bust. This is why we need to continue to get the word out and educate all Albertans. Our vision will most certainly stand the test of scrutiny.

Who are "we"? Besides those of us responding to your questions Vincent Wansink, "we" includes YOU. We look forward to detailed examination of our editorials, FAQ page and cross-examinations.

I think once you've done that everything will make perfect sense.

REX MURPHY: WE CARE NOTHING FOR FREE SPEECH – TRUDEAU PLAN TO REGULATE THE INTERNET IS BUT A SYMPTOM
The state does not own the rights of its citizens. It's an inversion of the relationship between citizen and government to think so

Author of the article: Rex Murphy

Publishing date: Apr 29, 2021

Freedom of speech is not the high holy ideal it once was. Freedom of expression, the wider concept, expression as thought, speech, art, performance and protest, is likewise no longer the clear and unchallengeable central core value of our democracies.

However imperfectly, the modern democracies were built around these concepts, their primal values. They have, alas, often been broken, but until very recent days, whenever they were violated, especially by state force, a genuine, near reflex response was outrage and condemnation. Their existence as ideals, to be relentlessly pursued and deeply cherished, supplied a guard against such violations, something close to a taboo. Those who attempted to degrade them, used power or status to walk around or through them, or sought to override the protections enshrined in the Charter, brought pariah status upon themselves.

As an ideal, free expression has been ever-present as a guiding star to the proper operations of any democracy.

The freedom of the individual, and thereby his or her dignity as a human being and citizen depends on emerges only when these rights are seen as belonging to the individual human being, owned by the individual, are not never to be diminished or circumscribed by the state, or the mob. And, more relevantly in the present moment, never through the actions and mood swings of the current and shallow ideologies of "progressive" politics.

The state does not own the rights of its citizens. It's an inversion of the relationship between citizen and government to think so. Citizens give orders to governments. Citizens are the ultimate rulers, which any definition of the word democracy will affirm demos - people; cracy -rule.

Yet we have experienced a grave dilution of how these rights are presently understood, in parallel with a grave dilution of respect for them. The rot began and was sadly nursed in the very institutions by those which should most defend and explain them. Our decaying universities.

Was it not the universities who pioneered the idea of "free speech zones" on campus? This was the granting of some small and marked piece of campus territory where students, whom the university decreed might say something "offensive" or "insensitive" or "perceived as discriminatory" (unwoke is the current terms for all these categories) would be forced, under edict and threat of expulsion to go to these islands, and only there be "allowed" to speak their minds. All else was forbidden space. "Allowed" speech is the antithesis of free speech, and designated "spaces" wherein that allowed speech could be voiced, a surrender of intellectualism, and a woeful instance of the cowardice of elite institutions.

It was the universities which played midwife to the new anti-intellectual doctrines such as "speech is violence" with its reverse twin dogma that "violence is speech." They spread the intellectual acid of relativism. The most faithful guardians, so we thought, of unrestrained thinking became the efficient and sly agents of its curtailment.

Even just a few years ago almost everyone could reference the great negative power the great churches of the West once held, the power to excommunicate, set up heretic-hunting inquisitions, draw up lists of which books could be read, and carried to stake or dungeon those who would challenge its power and self-declared infallibility. How the churches have been scorned for treading on such freedoms.

There is no stake or dungeon today, merely cancel culture. However, Twitter mobbing and cries of racism or homophobia, declamations for woke bishops are fine 21st century versions of the same.

The 20th century in particular supplied horrendous illustrations of what governments who suspend or absolutely deny the right to free speech, thought, or gathering. We have seen how very quickly descend into mass persecution and mass murder. The Gulag Archipelago is out there for all to read. Animal Farm and 1984 are still available.

Or, to take a home a recent example, when the employees of a publishing house in Canada "revolt" over the printing of their most prized author, Jordan Peterson. They actually wept, they wept at the thought that a publishing house was going to ... publish a book. A book they had not read and could not have read, but still they knew that it would be "traumatizing" (that word is now pure lexical junk) and "offensive" and "hurtful." Let us hope that none of these internet neurasthenics ever stubs a toe. What words will be left for him except to deplore the white supremacy of geologically stationary rocks and stones?

Throw away core concepts and all that is left is silliness and virtue-signaling.

To show how ludicrous and servile we've become, not that long ago Pepe le Pew, a poor misguided personable amorous French skunk, was sent to the cartoon Gulag. For pursuing a cat.

I skip hundreds of examples of woke Puritanism's descent into politically correct censorship. Only because the examples are legion, just too epidemical to report in the meagre spaces of a column. They require a modern Gibbon.

Some or all of the foregoing should be top of mind as we see our own government moving into regulating the internet and putting the posts and performances of any and every Canadian under its righteous regulatory eye. There's much more to say on that.

For now, Professor Michael Geist, a student of internet communications, in his many (currently permitted) observations, offers the strongest warnings of what this prospective legislation means. And for a stern and particular condemnation of the insolent initiative read Terence Corcoran's detailed condemnation of it.

I trust colleague Corcoran realizes he's gnawing away at Canada's social cohesion. But he is such an independent fiend, he may not.
